St. Joseph's Catholic High School

Craig Orioux is one of several new teachers at St. Joseph's Catholic High School here in Barrie, Ontario. He teaches grade nine and grade ten applied and academic Science. He has been teaching for eighteen years and is a firm believer in his Catholic faith. Mr. Orioux chose St Joe's as his school to teach at because he lives in our city of Barrie and wants to be closer to his home, this being a shorter drive than his previous school, Patrick Fogarty Catholic High School.

Mr. Orioux was born in Quebec and moved to Barrie at age eight. He has lived here ever since. As a student he attended our very own St. Joe's and graduated here.

He was inspired by his grade eleven chemistry teacher, Mrs. Diamond, to go on and take the time to become a teacher. He graduated from the University of Western Ontario and his journey was uphill from there.

After graduating from university he went on to get married and have two children, a son and daughter, named Ethan and Grace. Not only putting his wife and kids under his belt for his proudest accomplishments, he has also completed a half marathon and finally learned how to play hockey at age thirty.

Craig enjoys spending his spare time by mountain biking, playing tennis, going camping, hiking, playing hockey, and spending time with his kids.

Mr. Orioux inspires others to take their shots when given them: "You will miss one hundred percent of the shots you don't take."

New help in the Science department, Mr. Craig Orioux.
